This training session is designed for financial and accounting professionals who are committed to turning their firm's finance and accounting department into a world-class, best-practices operation while also mastering many of the skills necessary to move into the CFO position.

At this practical and intensive two-day seminar, you will examine the typical CFO career path, responsibilities and various compensation structures. You'll learn how the CFO can serve as top management's strategic business partner. You will leave this seminar understanding both the strategic planning process and how to write a compelling business plan that will be accepted by investment bankers.

Next, you will examine several proven strategies for raising capital for your firm. You will learn how to evaluate your firm's true value drivers and how this impacts the investment banking process. You will then review different funding strategies including debt structures, mezzanine financing, venture capital, and private placements vs. IPOs. You will also learn where to obtain funding.

Then, you will learn the most effective methods of managing your firm's working capital. You'll examine state-of-the-art methods for safe, web-based customer collection procedures; learn how P-cards can safely streamline purchasing procedures and paperwork; discover matching procedures for EFT settlements; and review techniques to safely minimize DSI and best practices to manage cash and liquidity.

You will also learn what leading, world-class companies are doing to reengineer their finance and accounting departments, streamline operations, increase productivity, and reduce costs. You will review metrics to determine overstaffing and examine cost-cutting solutions including; the latest business processing outsourcing procedures for finance and accounting, web-enabled financial applications, shared services opportunities, and how to reduce system complexity and excessive transaction processing. You will also review accelerated closing techniques and software that leading-edge organizations employ for 48-hour monthly closings.

Next, you will learn how to use both financial and non-financial benchmarks to drive both profits and corporate behavior. You will learn techniques to measure customer satisfaction and return on customer (ROC). You will also understand the customer relationship management process and related metrics.

CFO leadership requires a commitment to ethical practices including those now legislated by the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. You will conclude your two-day seminar with a review of key sections of this new legislation and also see how the new emphasis on corporate accountability and ethics can actually be used to a strategic advantage by your firm.
